

It should never be acceptable to shut off communications networks. The countries of Egypt, Nigeria, Libya, and Kazakhstan, have all shut off their country's mobile networks and/or Internet in recent years in attempts to prevent the expression of free speech. Now BART takes it upon itself to do the same. This is simply not acceptable. The public relies upon these networks for safety. These networks help to save lives every day and must be available at all times.